WHO IS “FRY” AND WHY SHOULD I USE HIS SIGHT WORD LIST?

- Edward Fry was a professor of Professor of Education and the Director of the Reading Center at Rutgers University.
- He wrote more than 31 books and 100 articles.
- He made lists of the most used words in reading and writing. They contain almost half the words met in any reading task.
- When students are able to memorize these words, their reading becomes automatic. This helps with both fluency and comprehension.

I'm sure there are countless ways that this product can be used in your classroom. Here's how I use it:

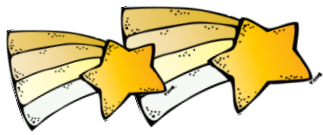

1. I begin the year by testing students on the first 100 words. If they miss a word or are not automatic when reading a word, I highlight that word on their list.
2. After reading the first list, students use a crayon to color in all words EXCEPT those highlighted. This way, they can see which words they are focusing on learning. It's also rewarding for them to color in the words they have already mastered.
3. This paper is kept in their Goal Setting binder. (You can find more information at <https://www.teacherspayteachers.com/Product/Class-Goal-Setting-Growth-Mindset-2063398>.) Students continue to practice.
4. Students are retested on the highlighted words periodically.
5. Repeat to move through the lists. Don't forget to give certificates as they master lists!
